Culinary Blow Torch with Gas Canister 220g

Our Culinary Blow Torch with Gas Canister 220g offers a quick option for creating a caramelised crust on meat that has been cooked in a sous vide machine, or searing the outside of fresh fish or seafood. By simply running it over the outer layer of meat you can achieve the maillard reaction, creating a browned exterior.

Culinary Blow Torch with Gas Canister 220g quantity

The Rolls Royce of food torches, the our Culinary Blow Torch puts out consistent reliable flames that create amazing crusts in no time. This torch uses butane canisters which are very inexpensive and it uses them efficiently. You simply twist the torch onto the canister and are good to go; no messy filling of compartments. The flame never goes out no matter how quickly you move the torch around or at what angle you are holding it. The lighting motion is very simple with a twist to open the fuel line and a pull of the trigger to ignite. You will never had to attempt ignition more than one time and you will never have the flame go out.

Why did we choose a Butane Blowtorch? The type of gas used is not nearly as important as the technique used to perform the sear. The most important thing is to be sure that the flame produced by the torch is a fully oxidizing flame. In this type of flame the gas is being completely combusted and can be identified by the dark blue, relatively short, flame that hisses and roars.

How to use: The best technique to practice when using a blowtorch is to use a sweeping motion, where the flame goes slowly back and forth across the surface to evenly 'scorch' the food. Don't concentrate too long on one area, or the food may burn.

- Offering up to 2 hours of life per canister you are guaranteed to complete your kitchen tasks.

Salt Plate for Konro (12x12x1.5cm)

The Himalayan Salt Plate for Konro is an exciting way of seasoning and serving food. The dusky pink Himalayan rock can be slowly heated or chilled to extreme temperatures. The tight crystal lattice in the Himalayan salt block means that it holds its temperature for long periods of time – to the extent that the salt block can be used to fry fish, or keep ice cream chilled.

Most excitingly, the Himalayan salt block is rich in mineral salt, which flavours – or even cures – the food served on the salt plate.

Try presenting slivers of sashimi on the salt plate, and watch it start to cure at the table. Another option is to slowly heat the salt block in the oven, and use it to fry scallops, or even an egg in front of guests. The salt block is also great when chilled in the freezer, and used to present ice cream – toffee, chocolate and caramel flavours work particularly well with the block's saltiness.

It is made from 100% Himalayan pink salt. It is a halite, or rock salt, also known as Sendha namak.

Salt is naturally antibacterial, so there is no need to use soap. Just wipe with a damp cloth, and dry well before storing. Do not immerse in water.

Please note: The salt plates are a natural product and do vary slightly in colour. Because salt plates are made of salt and not stone, and need to be heated and cooled extremely carefully, we can't guarantee against cracking during heating. For best practice, see more details in our article How to Cook Scallops on a Himalayan Salt Plate.
